

About

I am an industrial design student at the Rhode Island School of Design, raised between London, England and Menlo Park, California.

I'm passionate about industrial design for its layered problem-solving and the balance it demands between aesthetics and functionality. I excel in critical thinking and observation, using design research and iteration to develop creative, practical solutions informed by a well-rounded education.

I enjoy working across disciplines, applying interdisciplinary knowledge and design thinking to a wide range of products. My goal is to design thoughtfully and responsibly, creating work that meaningfully improves the lives of the people who use it, drawing on my unique skill set and perspective.
